

Table of Contents

These poems were made by cutting out bits of newspaper text and creating a collage. The intent of the poet becomes subject to the material. This technique is an old 1920's Dada artpiece / partygame that we heartily recommend all you kids try at home.

Some of the poems utilize further tricks. For instance, sometimes each line of the poem is one full piece of found text, with no alterations other than the poet's removing the line from its context. Other poems are looser in form, with full sentences mingled with clipped words that look more like kidnappers' notes.

Source material includes the San Francisco Chronicle and Examiner, New York Times, Boston Globe, Hampshire Gazette, IKEA Catalog, Good News Bible, some pulp novels and telephone directories.

All poems are written and ©1996 by Shoshana Marchand and Luke Jaeger.

Carnival bumper cars Must tread carefully

"Money does not buy certainty from foreigners, who simply won't snitch on employees who are not hoods, adding sorely needed green-board," he said. "We simply do not hit them with that awful thing."

"This was because a group of Dentsu Eye executives came to a kind of spiritual heaviness; I feel reasonably secure. And we sat and there, sandwiched in the snow, a number of men and women was once joined, then torn asunder by political advertising, 'It takes 10 ranges, volcanoes, earthquakes, prosecutors, policemen and judges to believe that we are out there
